BRAND MBA: STILL SHINY

he early numbers are out, and it does look like the Covid pandemic will have no impact on hiring at top B schools. Or on the size of the offers. The Covid pandemic thus, joins the list of other irritants like a broad slowdown, financial sector crisis, the Trump distractions and more that have failed to put a crimp on hiring at the top B schools. What this shows is that the sort of large, established firms that are still wedded to a planned recruitment cycle are still unable to find the talent they need outside the handful of top business schools in India. Talent that, even if a little or very rough around the edges, still offers the best hope to be moulded to perform well for these firms in the short to medium term.

Students today probably can't even imagine the days when just getting a decent job, preferably above a randomly decided baseline salary, was considered a good enough start. When not getting a job was a real risk, as the alternative could simply be an extended job hunt. Which is where the world has changed today, for good.

Not getting the Job is no longer an issue, not getting the Job you want possibly is. And if that happens, what can you do? For one. If you have loans to repay, go on and make a fist of the Job you do have, who knows it might just grow on you, besides helping repay that loan, fast.

On the other hand, if, like so many friends,

On the other hand, if, like so many friends, you are considering joining a startup, or even starting one of your own, remember, the downside to the decision has never been lower in history, as far as this writer can recall. This is because not only is the stable, long term jobgone for good, but the new environment for those who tried to be different was never better. Even if they fail, Consider the massive liquidity surge that

Consider the massive liquidity surger that the world is awash in. It's still an underappreclated fact, is is its ongoing impact, possibly. This massive liquidity surge that looks like it won't be going away for some time yet, pretty much guarantees that any business that is close to being viable, or even halfway viable along with a good story to tell, can survive.

The funding environment has never offered as many options and hope, as it does today, if you do want to go down that route for your venture. From angels, to family offices, to VCs to founders who have just come out of a liquidity' event, the options are exponentially higher today for young businesses.

With buzzwords like 'fail fast' in vogue, acceptance and even welcoming of failure was never higher in India. And then there is the

CHALLENGING THE SCRIPT

Change can be remarkably slow in education

he MBA degree is fittingly the most market led formal educational qualification in India today. From the broad rise in applicants and uniform course offerings through the 90's to the many new specialisations and other domain specific offerings today. Subjects like entrepreneurship, product, healthcare etc that are increasingly being offered at top schools indicate a pressure and hopefully, desire to respond to new realities.

Of course, a combination of government backing and a major metro still works to make for a really great combination. That explains the resilisence of FMS, Delhi University at the top, or the rise of DMS, ITT Delhi, besides the continued hold of the 'older' IIM's in the top heap. In fact, the struggles of the newer IIM's only underscore the challenges building an institution from a smaller town can throw up in India today. Unless you challenge the script, as IIM-Shillong or say, IIM-Kashipur has tried.

Government backing extracts a price, be it flexibility, and eventually, quality. For every FMS, there are university department in states whose MBA course are floundering. Privately managed institutes are more than holding whose MBA course are noundering. Frivately managed institutes are more than holding their own in those places.

Today, an IMT Ghaziabad, IMI Delhi, or the three out of the top 5 in West zone, privately managed institutes have built their case by being far more responsive to new realities.

Of course there are areas where they simply cannot compete. The truism, 'support education, not the educated' was perhaps never more relevant than these top institutes, when it comes to the ROI (Return on investment) rankings. It can be very difficult to go up against state subsidies, with 9 out of the top 10 ranks taken by government backed institutes. The two leading Delhi based institutes, unsurprisingly, are table tippers here.

The table I found most interesting though was the rankings table for institutes based on entrepreneurship. These institutes have not just responded, but moved a little ahead of the curve when it comes to their focus on entrepreneurship. For make no mistake, in India, I would venture to say that the typical MBA student is probably far less entrepreneurial as compared to her counterparts in other comparable markets. An MBA at a top B school is still seen as a ticket to stable job with higher earnings. It's something I discovered the hard way, when I took some sessions at top schools in the past year on entrepreneurship. Students might blame everything from preparing a small nest egy to paying off student loans to even lack of a co-founder, but in the top institutes, I would venture to say that less than 5% actually join with a plan to consider entrepreneurship.

Even those taking specific courses join after a little work experience, or after concluding foornetyl, I might add), that an entrepreneurial mindset is a valuable asset to have even in regular firms today.

The pity is that the biggest worry about turning entrepreneur remains as old as it was a

The pity is that the biggest worry about turning entrepreneur remains as old as it was a decade back, despite the improvement in many metrics like ease of doing business etc.
The fear of failure. It's something that cannot

Profile:-

Gramophone.co.in Cofounder and CEO

April 2016 - Present (6 years 4 months) At Gramophone we strive to create a difference in farming by bringing timely information, technology and right kind of inputs to achieve better yields for farmers. Our endeavour is to bring the best products and knowledge to the farmers. Gramophone is one stop solution for all kinds of inputs for the farmers. Farmers can buy genuine crop protection, crop nutrition, seeds, implements and agri hardware at their doorstep. We believe that technology can remove information asymmetry in the agriculture system. Farmers can access localized package of practice, crop advisory, and weather information coupled with the best products to grow. This will improve the productivity and help farmers sustainably increase the income from agriculture.

Gramophone.co.in Cofounder and CEO April 2016 - Present (6 years 4 months)

At Gramophone we strive to create a difference in farming by bringing timely information, technology and right kind of inputs to achieve better yields for farmers. Our endeavour is to bring the best products and knowledge to the farmers. Gramophone is one stop solution for all kinds of inputs for the farmers. Farmers can buy genuine crop protection, crop nutrition, seeds, implements and agri hardware at their doorstep.

We believe that technology can remove information asymmetry in the agriculture system. Farmers can access localized package of practice, crop advisory, weather information coupled with the best products to grow. This will improve the productivity and help farmers sustainably increase the income from agriculture.

behind. That said, the reader might not see too many differences in the way the schools that have participated in the survey have been placed this year vis- a vis their positions last year. That proves the other thing that we have learn diffrough our student years—that consistency is a stepping wone to success. The top schools on this list ack prough of their adaptability, innovation and thought leadership both in curriculum development and teaching. Many of them are active proponents of diversity in the dissense on—the vigin too.

The top schools on this list are known for their adaptability, innovation and thought leadership both in curriculum development and teaching. Many of them are active proponents of the control of diversity in the classroom—they don't simply welcome it but actually seek it out. They take bankers, consultants, engineers and people from military backgrounds. The leaders of various programmes continue to evaluate future direction and immediate path,
